Scavolini, a beacon in the kitchen and furniture industry, is further expanding its product line-up with Cross Elements, the new project featuring a range of versatile furniture systems and solutions, designed to meet the demands of contemporary living.

Meticulous attention to detail enhances every area of the home - from the living room to the kitchen, from the laundry area to the bedroom - promoting an integrated, flexible, and coordinated vision of space.

At the core of Cross Elements is the desire to create configurations that combine style and functionality, bringing to life interiors with a refined and personal character, capable of interacting with each other, maintaining consistent styling and architectural fluidity.

This philosophy is perfectly interpreted by new elements like Maxidoor: full-height cabinets combined with a minimalist 2 cm plinth, which creates an elegant and formally clean look. They are available for tall units or island back base units and can be customised with recessed grip profiles or handles, offering great design versatility.

However, it is with Freepass that the concept of connection between environments reaches its ultimate expression. This modular system allows for the creation of clever passageways between different areas of the home, overcoming the rigid separation between spaces and functions.

Freepass can be combined with two elements - partition wall larder units with single or double doors and the "Fluida" Wall System - to create custom-sized configurations with push opening and internal handles for closing. It can also be positioned in the centre of a room with a ceiling installation, offering a balanced integration between furnishings and architecture thanks to its extensive compositional freedom.

This solution is also ideal for discreetly accessing utility areas that are hidden, such as larders or laundry rooms, making transit simple and immediate without interrupting the harmony of the surrounding décor.

Within the Cross Elements project, you'll also find matching furniture and accessories designed to combine utility with aesthetic value, responding to the growing need to organise and enhance spaces. Among these, the Air Box solution - available for wall units, base units, and tall units - stands out with its sophisticated design, decorative melamine structure, aluminium frame doors offered in two finishes (anthracite grey and champagne), and two profile variants: flat or shaped. Concealed hinges add a tailored touch that enhances the clean-cut lines. Equally distinctive are the Sail modules, available for wall units and tall units, distinguished by a protruding door that also works as a side grip.

This particular configuration introduces a rhythmic variation between blocks and voids, making the entire composition dynamic and contemporary.

The offering is completed by the Vertical System wall panelling, an architectural solution for covering walls with vertically mounted panels and profiles, which can be integrated with open-fronted elements, shelves, and metal accessories.

Cross Elements is Scavolini's answer to the desire for living in spaces that are connected, functional, and sophisticated in design. Here, every element contributes to defining a harmonious whole, capable of blending aesthetics and immaculate design.
